Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

Introduction

The Canadian Research Index - Microlog puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. Canadian Research Index in print is a monthly indexing and abstracting service. An electronic version on CD-ROM or via the Internet is also available. Microlog represents our fulltext document service. Most titles included in Canadian Research Index are available in paper as well as microfiche format. Together, these services are a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications.

The Canadian Research Index includes scientific and technical research papers in physical, natural and social sciences. It also includes policy papers, important statistical publications, and annual reports.

Documents issued in English or French are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in the language of the publication, while bilingual documents are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in both languages.

Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by the Microlog Service approximately two months after publication of the list.

SOURCES

- government publications from the federal, provincial and municipal levels
- depository publications of reference value
- non-depository publications issued by government organizations, laboratories and research centres
- non-profit organizations, educational institutions and research groups
- some monographs and serials issued by Statistics Canada

ORGANIZATION

Canadian Research Index comprises the following sections:

Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

Corporate name index: Access by controlled format corporate names based on Canadiana Authorities.

Personal name index: Access by personal name.

Subject index: Subject terms based on Library of Congress and Canadian Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

Series titles: Lists by title and numbers all reports in a series; series are available as an on-going subscription or retrospective collection.

Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions.

ELECTRONIC ACCESS

The full Canadian Research Index file from 1982 to date is available in electronic formats on the SilverPlatter SPIRS platform. It is accessible on CD; it may be licensed for network use on a local server or on a SilverPlatter ERL server; and it is available for Internet subscription. Reports may be ordered through the National Technical Information Service in the U.S.A., or directly through Micromedia's Technical Information Centre. All catalogued documents issued by Statistics Canada are now included in electronic versions of Canadian Research Index. For information, contact Micromedia's CD Centre at 1-800-387-2689.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document. Most documents cited in Canadian Research Index are available as part of the Microlog Microfiche Subscription Service, institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in the Index. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprints may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

Introduction

Microlog : Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. L'Index de recherche du Canada imprimé est un service mensuel d'indexation et de résumés. Une version électronique est également offerte sur CD-ROM ou dans Internet. Microlog représente notre service de documents en texte intégral. La plupart des titres figurant dans l'Index sont disponibles sous forme imprimée et sur microfiche. Ces services combinés constituent un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada.

L'Index contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels.

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

De vastes efforts sont déployés pour assurer la pertinence de l'index. Par exemple, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

SOURCES

- publications fédérales, provinciales et municipales
- publications déposées servant de référence
- publications non déposées publiées par les organismes gouvernementaux, les laboratoires et les centres de recherche
- publications d'organismes à but non lucratif, d'établissements d'enseignement et de groupes de recherche
- certaines monographies et publication en série publiées par Statistique Canada

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

Index des dénominations sociales: donne un accès par dénominations sociales fondées sur les vedettes d'autorité du service Canadiana.

Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur.

Index des matières: des descripteurs fondés sur les vedettes matières des documents Library of Congress Subject Headings et Canadian Subject Headings sont associés à chaque publication; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces documents sont disponibles par le biais d'un abonnement permanent et ils sont aussi intégrés à une collection rétrospective.

Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés.

ACCÈS ÉLECTRONIQUE

Le fichier complet de l'Index de recherche du Canada, de 1982 à aujourd'hui, est disponible sous forme électronique à partir de la plate-forme SilverPlatter SPIRS. Il est offert sur CD-ROM et il est possible d'obtenir des licences d'utilisation en réseau pour un serveur local ou pour un serveur SilverPlatter ERL. Il est également disponible par le biais d'un abonnement Internet. Les rapports peuvent être commandés par l'intermédiaire du National Technical Information Service aux États-Unis ou encore directement au Centre d'information technique de Micromedia. Tous les documents catalogués publiés par Statistique Canada sont intégrés dans les versions électroniques de l'Index de recherche du Canada. Pour plus de détails, contactez le personnel de Micromedia au 1 800 387-2689.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

Le numéro d'accès unique de Microlog est la clé qui permet de repérer immédiatement tout document. La majorité des documents cités dans l'Index de recherche du Canada sont offerts par le service d'abonnement aux microfiches de Microlog. Les organismes peuvent s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de l'Index. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back.
Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

The 1995 British Columbia seafood industry : year in review

Victoria : Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food, 1996. 8 p. : III.

MICROLOG 97-00952 (1 fiche)

British Columbia's seafood products are derived from over 80 different species of finfish, shellfish, and plants from the marine and freshwater environments. This document presents performance highlights, and statistics on landings, canned pack and prices for salmon, and wholesale and landed values, and landings of groundfish, farmed and wild seafood. Activities are presented for sockeye, pink, canned and farmed salmon, herring, halibut, groundfish and shellfish. Licences and landings of marine plants and non-tidal commercial fisheries are included, along with significant events that happened over the past year.

1997 assessment valuation system

Regina : Saskatchewan Assessment Management Agency, 1995. iv, 30 p.

MICROLOG 97-00577 (1 fiche)

Reviews the 1997 Assessment Valuation System, whose objective is to assess property at its fair value as required by municipal acts in Saskatchewan. The system addresses the inequities inherent in the province's present 1965-based system and updates it to reflect current Canadian assessment practices. Includes background on the development of the new system and comparisons with the 1965-based system. Tables outline the valuation procedures for land, buildings, and special purpose property. Also includes results of preliminary computer modelling of projected increases in assessment resulting from implementation of the new system.

Aboriginal participation in the mining industry of Canada : annual report 1996

Intergovernmental Working Group on the Mineral Industry. Sub-committee on Aboriginal Participation in Mining. Ottawa : The Sub-committee, 1996. ii, 58 p.

The Intergovernmental Working Group on the Mineral Industry formed a Sub-committee, Native Participation in Mining to study all aspects of Native participation in mining. The Sub-committee's objectives are to document best practices, with a realistic view to the incidence of the costs and benefits of each and to identify new ways of matching Native lifestyles with the mineral industry employment opportunities; to identify the concrete steps which governments, mining companies, Native groups and individuals can take to substantially boost Native participation in mining; and to examine what, if any, incentives could be identified and what legal and structural barriers to development could be removed, in order to speed progress toward the goal of increased Native participation in mining. A report summary is given. The appendices include: Increasing capacity in aboriginal communities through participation in mineral exploration and mining; joint ventures for economic development; case studies; the mining-aboriginal people demographic relationship; selected federal government programs/policies for aboriginal participation in mining; and aboriginal participation in mining, six year of study.

Access to the holdings of Nova Scotia libraries : final report -- Abridged

Prepared by Beaumont and Associates Inc. and Nordicity Group Ltd. Halifax : Dept. of Education & Culture, Nova Scotia Provincial Library, 1996. viii, 60 p. : III.

The objective of this study was to determine a model for providing public access to the holdings of Nova Scotia libraries. Additional objectives were to assess the availability of Nova Scotia library holdings information in machine-readable form; to determine appropriate linkages between existing automated library systems; to determine appropriate mechanisms for providing access to holdings information which were not readily available at present; and to develop a cost-effective resource sharing strategy consistent with the national strategy of the National Library of Canada. Parameters for the study were established through a survey of about 75 Nova Scotia libraries including regional, university, government, and special libraries. The survey gathered information on automated systems, bibliographic databases, retrospective conversion, participation in networks, and future plans. Recommendations are provided in such areas as information technology architecture, library network access, resource sharing, and automation.

En février 1991, le gouvernement fédéral annonçait la mise en œuvre d'une initiative quadriennale de 136 millions de dollars pour lutter contre la violence familiale, à laquelle participaient six ministères fédéraux et un organisme. Ce compte rendu renferme des renseignements sur les bénéficiaires de subventions (c.-à-d. les promoteurs de projets), le genre de travaux effectués, et le titre et le lieu de distribution des produits finaux (présentation vidéo, manuels, lignes directrices et rapports, par exemple). Pour faciliter la consultation, ce rapport est divisé par province et territoire, d'est en ouest, et se termine par une section nationale. Les projets sont répertoriés selon l'endroit où se trouvent les bénéficiaires; par exemple, un projet parrainé par une organisation provinciale, régionale ou locale au Manitoba figurera dans la section sur le Manitoba. Dans chaque section, les projets sont classés par ordre alphabétique des organisations bénéficiaires. Une page de titre sépare et identifie les sections provinciale, territoriale et nationale. Il est à noter que l'information est présentée dans la langue où elle a été soumise au Centre. Cependant, tous les descripteurs sont bilingues.

In February 1991, the federal government announced a four-year, $36 million, Family Violence Initiative involving six federal departments and one agency. This report provides information on the funded recipients (i.e. the project sponsors), the type of work undertaken, and the titles and whereabouts of the final products (i.e. videos, manuals, guidelines, reports, etc.). For convenience, the report has been divided along provincial, territorial and national lines, moving from east to west and ending with a national section. Projects are categorized by location of funded recipient, and therefore a project sponsored a provincial, regional or local organisation in Manitoba will be located in the Manitoba section. Within each section, projects are arranged alphabetically by the recipient organization. A title page separates each section and identifies the provincial, territorial or national section. Please note that information is presented in the language in which it was submitted.

An assessment of Advanced House technologies was carried out to identify the most promising technologies emerging from the Program and to determine appropriate government action to capitalize on the opportunities presented. This report compiles background documents which provide detailed information on that assessment. It includes five sections: a documentation of the assessment framework and process; the results of two screening assessments of about 40 technologies; assessment sheets used to document and rank technologies during the screening steps; complete detailed assessments of nine promising technologies; and background data utilised in performing preliminary and detailed assessments, including housing stock data, energy performance characteristics, and market penetration scenarios.

Includes an inventory and evaluation of sand and gravel resources, along with a discussion of bedrock aggregate potential, for an area on the north shore of Lake Huron. The report is based on a detailed field assessment undertaken in 1992 and on previous studies completed in the area. A number of the sand and gravel deposits observed have been grouped together into six selected sand and gravel resource areas of primary significance. Aggregate products in these areas range from crushed gravel to a variety of gravelly sand and sand products, including granular sub-base and select subgrade material. In addition, seven deposits are classed as being of secondary significance. The potential for quarry development in the Nipissing diabase is also assessed, with discussion of factors that would influence quarry development. The appendix contains information on the area's sand/gravel deposit geology and bedrock geology, as well as aggregate test specifications.

The Council's main objective is the enlargement of educational opportunities for Alberta students through inter-institutional transfer. This report reviews the Council's activities for the fiscal year, including research studies on student transfer and student applications, initiatives to improve communications and optimize the effectiveness of transfer, and publication of the Alberta Transfer Guide. Statistics are included on student transfer patterns. Appendices include the Council's principles, policies, and procedures, an outline of the Alberta Transfer Model, and a list of Council publications.

Dans ce rapport, nous exposons plus en détail nos attentes à l'endroit du Régime de pensions du Canada. Nous revoyons d'abord certains des mythes et des idées fausses concernant le Régime de pensions du Canada qui ont fait obstacle à toute discussion intelligente au sujet du Régime. Le chapitre 2 revêt les propositions de financement de régime permanent du RPC et recommande que les gouvernements envisagent plutôt d'élargir la base des gains cotisables. Le chapitre 3 avance certaines améliorations possibles des prestations du RPC et critique carrément les coupures proposées dans le document de consultation. Le gouvernement du Québec a déjà rejeté d'emblée les coupures dans son propre document de consultation sur les changements possibles du Régime de rentes du Québec, le pendant du Régime de pensions du Canada. Le chapitre 4 comporte une critique de la recherche qui a mené au document de consultation sur le RPC ainsi qu'une revue des préoccupations de longue date du Conseil concernant le manque de transparence qui caractérise l'administration du RPC par les gouvernements.

The Canadian nuclear power utilities use thermoluminescent dosimetry systems to perform their own external beta/gamma dosimetry. To ensure these systems perform satisfactorily, they are subjected to routine quality control testing by their parent organizations. This report analyses the test results for June 1988 to May 1993 using the pass criterion which was originally agreed upon by the organizations involved and which is described in the report. The analysis offers and indication of the performance of the different sites which operate a dosimetry service. Comparisons are made with each site's performance during June 1985 to May 1988 as summarised in a previous report. Finally, recommendations are made to help the organisations refine their dosimetry.

The level of potential output plays a central role in the Bank of Canada's new Quarterly Projection Model (QPM). This report describes a general method to measure potential output, as well as its implementation in the QPM system. The report begins with a short history of the measurement of potential output. Building on this experience, a hybrid method of measuring potential output is developed that combines economic structure with a time-series filter. The resulting filter, known as the extended multivariate (EMV) filter, exploits theoretical relationships that are embodied in QPM in an effort to identify demand-side and supply-side influences on output. These various relationships are combined in a filter that imposes a smoothness property on the dynamics of potential output. The report describes the general structure of the EMV filter, the various economic relationships that it uses, and the weights applied to these different pieces of information. It concludes with an evaluation of the EMV filter and some suggestions for future improvements.

This document presents an assessment of the short, medium, and long-term demand for electricity in B.C. It outlines the assumptions, sources, and process utilized to allow an understanding of the factors and uncertainties influencing future customer demands. The report attempts to provide both enough insight into its main foundations and enough detail to meet the requirements of a significantly diverse audience. Presents the probable electricity requirements, an economic and demographic outlook, residential, commercial, and industrial sales, a regional forecast and future directions. Includes the forecast process and methodology, marketing and Power Smart, and a forecast uncertainty and sensitivity analysis.

The TEA property, containing high-grade bedded barite deposits, is located 160 kilometres north-east of Ross River in south-eastern Yukon. This report describes an investigation of the feasibility of beneficiating the barite to achieve American Petroleum Institute standards for the barite used in well drilling mud. A dry milling process was used, with heated air entrainment of particles for both size classification and gangue separation. The appendix contains detailed test data.

Le secteur Montréal-Longueuil est la portion du Saint-Laurent la plus artificialisée entre le Lac Ontario et la mer. La croissance tentaculaire de la ville a multiplié les motifs et les occasions d'empiétements en milieux aquatiques et riverains. De grandes superficies de milieux humides, qui constituaient des habitats fauniques de première importance, ont disparu sous les remblais, les édifices ou les structures les plus diverses. Ce document présente un bilan régional du secteur. Les points qui y sont abordés sont les suivants : le Saint-Laurent, d'hier à aujourd'hui; le programme des zones d'intervention prioritaire; caractérisation du secteur Montréal-Longueuil; les activités humaines et leurs principaux effets sur le plan d'eau; récréation, tourisme et conservation; et, situation actuelle et orientations possibles.

The purpose of this report is to examine available scientific data and models relevant to the hypothesis that induction of genetic changes and cancers by low doses of ionising radiation at low dose rate is a stochastic process with no threshold or apparent threshold. It includes a review of the biological background and theory related to the incidence of cancers and genetic diseases, dosimetry and dose rates, induction of cancer, and cell response to radiation. The report ends with a discussion of the eight appendices, which are separate papers on such topics as the genetic effects of radiation, induction of cancer in humans, health effects of low doses and dose rates, induction of cancer in animals, and adaptive response to radiation. These procedures were used to measure the VOC emission characteristics of various construction materials used in the Advanced Houses and R2000 Healthier Houses in Halifax. The standard test procedure focused on the use of small environmental chambers for measuring the VOC emissions from building material samples. For each material type, a test parameter and methodology sheet was developed to record product-specific information and sample preparation and test procedures. Results are reported and discussed regarding emissions from such materials as carpets, insulation, fibreboard, paint, flooring, and wood composites. The appendix includes a general method for determination of VOC emission factors and sample test parameter and methodology sheets.

The objectives of this study were to identify and map the flood risk areas along a nine-kilometre reach of Sheep River, Alberta in the vicinity of Black Diamond and Turner Valley. The study begins with reviews of the history of flooding in the study area, the available data on floods in the area, and the river and valley features. It then presents results of calculations of flood levels using Version 4.6.0 of the HEC-2 computer model. The model was calibrated using high water marks recorded for the May 1990 flood and published data. The model determined water surface profiles for the 1 in 5, 1 in 10, 1 in 50, and 1 in 100 year floods. Floodway

Through high-level discussions between China's Ministry of Construction and the Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, a specific opportunity has been identified and defined for Canadian companies to enter the Shanghai housing market. This report reviews findings from a mission sent to China to conduct a pre-feasibility assessment of that opportunity and to better define it in order to provide Canadian participants with an understanding of its purpose, content, possible management roles, costs, and timing. The opportunity identified is the development of a demonstration project in the Yuyao New Town, part of Shanghai's Pudong New Area, that could showcase Canadian capabilities in site planning, architectural design, building construction, and building materials manufacturing. The report includes a review of the Shanghai housing market, the accessibility of that market to foreign investment, the Yuyao project and its Canadian component, the market development potentials for Canadian companies arising from the project, and the risks associated with the project from the perspective of Canadian industry.

Three highest priorities identified in a survey on problems and initiatives related to pesticide application in forestry were: development of improved spray-block and swath marking techniques to guide the spray pilot; development of a guidance and marking system for ground sprayers; and development of a system that would record spray aircraft performance in relation to specific points within a spray block. In the years since the survey, developments in global positioning system (GPS) technology have provided solutions to a large part of the above three priorities. This report begins with an overview of GPS technology and then discusses the application of GPS technology to the three priorities identified. It also notes immediate problems with GPS systems that need to be resolved before they can be used in forest pesticide spraying applications, as well as pending solutions to those problems. The appendix outlines principal features of GPS systems presently available to pesticide applicators.

The Challenge of encouraging investment in new rental housing in Ontario : discussion paper

By Greg Lampert. Toronto : Ministry of Municipal Affairs & Housing, 1995. viii, 69 p. : ill.

This report was commissioned to examine the economics of private rental investment in Ontario and to identify measures which the government could take to encourage the construction of new rental housing. It begins with an overview of how a private rental project operates, from project development and financing to the future equity growth of the project. It then surveys rental markets in Ontario today, with a focus on Toronto as the dominant market in the province. Subsequent sections cover the regulation and taxation of rental housing, development costs, and financing, with industry recommendations on how to make rental housing investment more attractive and on reducing the gap between economic and market rents. The report concludes with a proposed program to enhance the supply of Ontario rental housing, including initiatives to promote new rental investment.

Using monthly data from the Canadian Labour Force Survey, this document investigates changes in the complete lengths of new job spells from 1981 through 1994. While the average complete length of new jobs did not increase or decrease over the period, changes in the distribution of complete job lengths suggest that there is an increase in the proportion of short-term jobs and a decrease in the proportion of medium-term jobs created over the period. The proportion of long-term jobs remained unchanged. This pattern of change was found among virtually all demographic subgroups exam-Ined suggesting that an economy wide (rather than a sectoral or demographic) explanation must be sought.

Ongoing complaints regarding odours and adverse health effects have been received from residents living near Money's Mushrooms Composting Facility in Surrey, British Columbia. This report presents results of a study undertaken to provide information necessary for a risk assessment of the potential health impact the facility may have locally and beyond. The study focused on the identification of the chemicals and biological agents present in the air within the facility and on a toxicological assessment of those contaminants. Substances analyzed include volatile organic compounds, amines, ammonia, fungi, and bacteria. Variations in contaminant emissions over time and in different parts of the facility are noted. The study identifies measures that may improve the air quality at the facility.

Victoria : Ministry of Education, Skills & Training, 1996. 86 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7726-3018-6 MICROLOG 97-00923 (1 fiche)

This plan has been developed to ensure that all British Columbians are prepared to participate in today's changing society; to find productive employment in a competitive labour market; to have opportunities for continuous learning; and to receive value for the investment made in public post-secondary education and training. The plan document first sets out the context, including a review of the history and current state of British Columbia's public post-secondary system and the forces acting to change that system. It then presents goals and strategies for providing post-secondary education and training, enhancing learning efficiency, forming new pathways for learning, providing access to flexible education and training opportunities, eliminating barriers, ensuring affordability and accountability, and establishing organizations to achieve system goals. The plan recommends implementing system-wide approaches to complement the strengths and diversity of individual institutions and to promote responsive, flexible, and high quality program delivery.

Begins with a brief description of the Fraser River basin, focusing mainly on local point sources of chlorinated hydrocarbons. Characteristics of specific contaminants such as polychlorinated biphenyls, dioxins, and furans are reviewed. Subsequently summarises results of findings of levels of chlorinated hydrocarbons found in the eggs of great blue herons, double-crested cormorants, pelagic cormorants, bald eagles, and ospreys, and in the liver of American mink and river otter. Discusses geographic differences and temporal trends in the data, and compares contaminant levels observed in the various indicator species. Tentative conclusions are drawn regarding the potential health risks that the observed levels of chlorinated hydrocarbons pose to the wildlife population. Concludes with recommendations for further action.

A City of towns : alternatives for the planning and design of housing in St. John's, Newfoundland

By Robert Mellin. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, External Research Program, 1995. 218 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 97-01190 (3 fiche)

This report focuses on the urban form and houses of older residential neighbourhoods in St. John's, Newfoundland. It documents the physical form of the older residential neighbourhoods by formulating a neighbourhood and housing typology. Selected areas were analyzed with regard to housing density, lot proportions, setbacks, house types, street space, house size, housing costs, development costs, solar orientation, block lengths, infrastructure lengths, zoning, landscape features, and other features. Computer generated models were used to represent three-dimensional effects of various factors on the appearance of the street. The details of urban and house form that could contribute to the neighbourhood character were analyzed and interpreted. The report also intends to demonstrate that nearly all the ingredients that could contribute to sensible planning for new residential areas in St. John's are contained in the older residential areas.

The Commodity-price cycle and regional economic performance in Canada

By Mario Lefebvre and Stephen S. Poloz. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1996. ii, 31 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada) ; 96-12 ISSN 1192-5434 ISBN 0-662-25054-0 MICROLOG 97-00782 (1 fiche)

This paper attempts to provide one interpretation of the broad regional economic history of Canada since the early 1970s. It suggests that regional diversity in economic performance reflects movements in Canada's terms of trade, which very frequently are tied to developments in world commodity markets. The hypothesis advanced in the paper is that an improvement in Canada's terms of trade due to a rise in world commodity prices tends to boost output in the regions that produce primary products and dampen output in those that use primary products as an input. Because these activities are not uniformly distributed across regions in Canada, such shocks have implications for regional economic performance. The paper presents a qualitative analysis of three episodes (1974, 1978, and 1987) and a statistical analysis using simple vector autoregression.

Creating a career resource centre

Edmonton : Alberta Advanced Education & Career Development, 1996. 69 p. : ill.
ISBN 0-7732-1705-3
MICROLOG 97-01002 (1 fiche)

This guide is designed to help career development practitioners (such as counsellors, human resources personnel, and service agency managers) create and maintain career resource centres. Such centres provide access to a wide variety of sources of career information to clients, who may be students, company employees, or others. Sections of the guide cover initial considerations such as whether a career resource centre is really needed, potential clientele and their information needs, and centre goals; human resources for operating the centre; space and equipment needed; information resources to be provided, including occupational materials, computer and internet materials, and audio-visual formats; organization and maintenance of the information resources; and marketing the centre. The guide also includes a checklist for setting up a centre, a list of typical skills needed for centre staff, and information on developing a needs assessment questionnaire.

There is increasing recognition that systematic and objective quality assessment of the scientific software used in design and safety analyses of nuclear facilities is necessary to support safety and licensing decisions. Because of the complexity and large size of these programs and the resource constraints faced by the Atomic Energy Control Board reviewer, it is desirable that automated tools are used wherever practical. This report presents criteria for evaluating the quality of scientific software and identifies metrics for which those criteria can be evaluated. An appropriate automated tool for quality assessment was selected from a survey of automated tools to measure those metrics. The tool usage is demonstrated on three sample programs.

Prince Edward Island. Round Table on Resource Land Use and Stewardship. Charlottetown : The Round Table, 1996. x, 42 p. : ill.

The Prince Edward Island government appointed a Round Table to develop a resource land use strategy for the province. This document reviews the work and initial findings of the Round Table, as a basis for further discussion. The following critical issues identified by government are reviewed: tourism and the character of the island landscape; maintaining biodiversity; water quality; soil quality; converting pasture and woodland to more intensive production; pesticide use and conflicts between neighbours; clearcutting and inadequate regeneration of forest land; loss of resource lands and urbanization; and productive use of Crown resource lands. Under each issue, the current situation, trends, and indicators are noted. The document then describes avenues for change, including private sector and government initiatives in such areas as soil conservation and sustainable farming practices. Finally, the document lists indicators that could be used to measure progress toward certain resource land use objectives.

Procedures now exist to quantify the impacts of physical changes on productive capacity of fish habitat. These procedures allow the evaluation of pre- and post-development scenarios, including any compensatory measures. This report applies these procedures to two case studies consisting of the construction of a 150-metre long headland in Hamilton Harbour and the construction of marina breakwaters in the Bronte Outer Harbour, Lake Ontario. The investigations focused on evaluating the indirectly modified areas, or those affected by changes to wave and current patterns caused by the presence of the new development. Specific impacts examined include changes to surficial substrate and depth, changes to macrophyte coverage, changes to wave conditions, and the relationship between physical processes and macrophyte growth. A new criterion for limiting local wave conditions associated with the survival of macrophytes is proposed and recommendations are made to refine and substantiate such a criterion.

Discusses the design and analysis of a prototype residential greywater heat recovery system which was installed in the Manitoba Advanced House in Winnipeg. Describes the design and construction of the system, including the basic performance equations; operational experiences with the system in the Advanced House; and a finite-difference computer model developed to simulate the system in different configurations under various operational conditions. A performance analysis using the model presents a series of annual simulations to explore the impact of various design parameters and operational variables on the system's performance. The prototype system in the Advanced House was defined as the base case. Key output parameters reported are the percentage savings produced by the preheat system and absolute energy savings.

Un autre volet de l'étude a été consacré à la comparaison d'approches différentes au niveau de la cartographie écologique. Le choix d'une approche écologique, la production de cartes thématiques, l'évaluation du potentiel forestier et la localisation des zones fragiles sont des éléments clés d'une démarche de planification et ils constituent l'ensemble des résultats relatifs à ce projet. Plus spécifiquement, le rendement des éclaircies précommerciales et les conditions de régénération sur le sol mince ont été étudiés.

The differential diagnostic technique is a projective drawing test in which the individual is asked to copy 12 figures, one at a time, that are presented on stimulus cards. The interpretation of this technique is based on the way in which the tested individual controls his productions in reference to the stimulus card or the control that is exerted by the individual's ego on his drawing behaviour in relation to the uncontrolled, inaccurate, or chaotic aspects of the drawings. There are 26 scoring factors representing different qualities that might be present in terms of control or lack thereof in the subject's drawings. The factors are categorized into groups in terms of their representation of control or accuracy, or loss of control or accuracy. This document gives instruction on test administration for children or adults as well as information on scoring the resulting drawings.

A Discrete-time macroscopic dynamic traffic assignment model

Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 96-31) (Publication / Université de Montréal. Département d'informatique et de recherche opérationnelle ; no. 1044)

Proposes a dynamic model for the traffic assignment problem which provides a simple and straightforward discrete-time description of the variations of flows on a road network during a day or a peak period. Networks with multiple origin-destination pairs can be handled and flexible departure times are allowed. The model assumes that drivers try to minimize their total travel costs and for each origin-destination pair. Total travel cost is evaluated with regards to total time spent travelling, departure time, and arrival time. It is assumed that drivers use information about the traffic condition of the current day to improve their travel costs on the next day. A first-in, first-out discipline is enforced on all links at all periods of the day and congestion effects at junctions are taken into account. For day-to-day travel adjustments, the model considers that part of total travel demand is shifted to the best travel alternatives according to the previous day's traffic conditions. Dynamic traffic equilibrium assignment is achieved when the driver of each origin-destination pair is unable to find a better travel alternative. The paper proves the existence of such an assignment under appropriate conditions.

Neither the Alberta Cemeteries Act nor the Prearranged Funeral Services Act has been substantively amended since their enactment in 1960. Given the changes in the funeral marketplace, the creation of an Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board, and the direction of the provincial government, it is now considered appropriate to review that legislation. As part of that review, stakeholders were asked to submit their views on issues existing in the industry. This discussion paper was developed as a result of the feedback received. It identifies long-standing and emerging issues for further discussion related to reform of the legislation. These issues include general issues with application to the entire funeral services industry such as sales practices and disclosure requirements, and issues specific to the two Acts, including cemetery ownership, abandoned cemeteries, trust funds, and financial reporting. The appendix lists potential changes to the legislation.

Ontario's provincial-municipal relationship is the most entangled and complex in Canada. The Ontario government, in collaboration with the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, has launched a process known as disentanglement to reform that relationship. Disentanglement refers to the unravelling of responsibilities now shared by governments in order to achieve delivery of services that is more accountable, efficient, and effective than at present. This report makes two contributions to the disentanglement process. The first is a brief history of provincial-municipal relations in Ontario with particular reference to previous attempts at clarifying provincial and municipal roles. Reforms of the late 1960s-early 1970s are covered in detail. The second reviews relations between municipalities and other levels of government elsewhere, including other provinces, the United States, Japan, Australia, France, and the United Kingdom. The report also reviews global trends affecting the role of municipalities in relation to other levels of government and the private sector. The experiences in the other jurisdictions and analyses of past Ontario reforms and global trends are then discussed in relation to Ontario's current disentanglement process.

Much of the framing lumber used in construction of wood frame buildings is not structurally necessary, but is only used for secondary blocking and edge nailing supports. To avoid the labour and material costs involved in placing this extra lumber, the author has invented a sheet metal angle system as a framing accessory applicable to all construction activity employing wood frame technology. This report describes the invention and a project that field tested the framing accessory system prototype. The project selected was a large four-storey wood frame apartment block in Halifax, with the new system installed in a selected apartment in various locations. The overall theme of this lecture is the place of technology and technological change in shaping the past, present, and future, and the risks taken if people do not understand its place in human life. It begins with a review of technological change, including models of long-term economic growth and examples of changes brought about by such technologies as writing, printing, iron and steel, steam power, electricity, and the computer. It then discusses some generalisations learned from history about why the West has grown rich compared to other societies; actions that could threaten the foundations of the West's success; and growth in the less-developed countries today. Part two considers such issues as population growth, sustainable development, the collective memory of the effect of technology, public policies, the speed of technological change, and the future of poverty and work. It concludes with discussion of the policy and political implications of technological change for Canada.

The Field-Irradiator-Gamma (FIG) project chronically exposed a section of the boreal forest to ionizing radiation by placing a cesium-137 source on top of a 20-metre tower at a south-east Manitoba forest site. The irradiation continued from 1973 to 1986 and the forest was exposed to radiological dose rates ranging from 65 to 0.005 milligray/hour along a gradient extending 500 metres from the source. The data gathered at the FIG site can be used to identify radiological dose rates that forest communities can tolerate. This report reviews the previous data collected at the FIG site during the pre-irradiation and irradiation phases and the methodology used to establish a baseline for future comparisons. Permanently marked sampling plots, a particular strength of the study, enable researchers to compare the present forest community with that measured during the last 25 years.

This Action plan represents the first attempt by the Government of Canada to estimate total greenhouse gas emissions from its operations. While it covers the major sources of such emissions, better data is required to enable coverage of all sources and types of greenhouse gas emissions in future plans. Guidelines are developed to ensure the annual inclusion, in existing and planned departmental reporting mechanisms, of consistent information on energy use and other sources of greenhouse gas emissions and on actions being taken to reduce them.

Reports efforts to develop normalised capacity and efficiency curves, as a function of entering water temperature, for use in a performance prediction algorithm for dual capacity (two-speed or dual compression) ground source heat pumps (GSHPs). Begins with descriptions of GSHP compressor and indoor blower operation, based on three commercially available GSHP models. Also presents normalized heating capacity and coefficient of performance (COP) equations, as well as normalized cooling capacity and efficiency equations, for the two-speed and dual compressor systems. The appendix contains a description of the simplified GSHP algorithm.

Continuous distribution of ventilation air as called for in building codes has a significant energy cost in many houses. This report investigates the cost of distributing ventilation air and the benefits of more energy efficient ventilation strategies. It evaluates 15 ventilation systems through cost-benefit analysis using two house types, five locations, and three fuels. Low-cost distribution strategies with low energy use are identified and recommended for field testing to evaluate their effectiveness at distributing ventilation air.

A la fin de 1990, le sous-comité mixte sur les études normatives du Comité consultatif de la radioprotection et du Comité consultatif de la sûreté nucléaire de la CCEA a décidé qu'on devrait effectuer une enquête sur les programmes de recherche en radioprotection au Canada. Les objectifs de cette enquête étaient de déterminer l'état actuel du financement de ce type de recherche et de comprendre les changements qui se sont produits au cours de la dernière décennie. Le financement de la recherche en radioprotection au Canada joue un rôle fondamental dans l'établissement et le maintien d'un bassin de professionnels formés qui peuvent comprendre, et contribuer à faire comprendre à l'échelle internationale, les effets sur la santé de l'exposition aux rayonnements ionisants et qui peuvent ainsi fournir des conseils judicieux sur les problèmes éprouvés en radioprotection. Un questionnaire en bonne et due forme a été approuvé par le SCMEN en juin 1991 et une liste d'adresses a été compilée. Ce questionnaire a été distribué plus tard en 1991. Ce rapport constitue une analyse des informations recueillies et il contient des observations relatives à l'état de la recherche dans ce domaine au Canada.

This document outlines the New Brunswick Dept. of Transportation's approach to environmental protection in a wide range of activities that are an integral part of its mandate. For each activity, the document discusses environmental considerations and describes environmental protection measures used. Activities covered include highway planning and design, road construction, highway structures and bridges, and operations such as maintenance, snow removal, and ferries. The final sections of the document cover procedures used in areas of special environmental consideration, such as fish habitat, forests, wetlands, and agricultural lands; contingency plans for such emergencies as chemical spills and forest fires; compliance monitoring; and outside contracting.

This study represents an attempt to document and describe the significant ecological and biophysical features of environmentally significant areas (ESAs) within two natural regions of Alberta and to suggest strategies for their conservation and management. It begins with an overview of the criteria used in classification of ESAs, their levels of significance, and the role of ESAs in maintaining biodiversity. It then reviews data collection methods used in the study and describes the broad characteristics of the two study areas. The subsequent sections of the study describe terrain and landscape features, vegetation features and habitat communities, and faunal communities in the study areas. The final chapter outlines the broad, easily recognizable landscape types or major, visible landform and lifeform complexes found in the study areas. Appendices include a list of fauna species with habitats in the study areas, and lists of ESA sites in the two areas.

The Abbotsford aquifer is an important source of water in the Fraser River lowlands, but is highly susceptible to surface derived contamination. Nitrate contamination of groundwater in the aquifer is a major problem in the region, and its source is not positively known. This report describes a study using the stable isotopic composition of groundwater nitrate to evaluate the origin of nitrates in the aquifer system and to ascertain whether natural remediation of nitrate in the aquifer by bacterial denitrification is occurring. The investigators analysed nitrogen-15 and oxygen-18 isotopic compositions from groundwater samples and from unsaturated zone porewater profiles, as well as the nitrogen-15 of potential nitrate contamination source materials (manure, fertilisers). Additional data were collected to augment the nitrate isotope data, such as water chemistries, stable isotopes of water, and tritium.

The bulletin reports on the radiation doses to the public due to emissions from the Pickering and Darlington nuclear generating stations. The bulletin also provides comparative information on dose levels from other sources. This report presents results of a door-to-door survey of residents living near the two nuclear plants and within the circulation areas of the five local newspapers. The survey goals were to measure the public's awareness of the existence of the Radiation Monitor, the ease in understanding information presented in the bulletin, the perceived usefulness of the bulletin, and the perceived accessibility of the Board as an information source. Partant des données mensuelles de l'Enquête sur la population active du Canada, ce document examine de quelle façon la durée complète moyenne de l'emploi a changé entre 1981 et 1994. Bien que la durée complète moyenne d'un nouvel emploi n'ait ni augmenté, ni diminué au cours de cette période, des changements dans la distribution des périodes complètes d'emploi donnent à penser que la proportion d'emplois à court terme s'est relevée tandis que celle de nouveaux emplois à moyen terme a faibli. La proportion d'emplois de longue durée est demeurée la même. Cette tendance affecte presque tous les sous-groupes de la population examinés, signe que l'explication du phénomène se situe au niveau de l'économie prise dans son ensemble (plutôt qu'au niveau d'un secteur ou d'un groupe démographique).

VENTRAD is a computer program used to predict radon and radon daughter concentrations in uranium mine atmospheres. VENTPROG is a mine ventilation program used either independently or to produce the air flow data needed to run VENTRAD. The purpose of this report is to examine the stability and limitations of the VENTRAD and VENTPROG computer models. To determine agreement of VENTRAD output with that produced by the differential equations for radioactive growth and decay, VENTRAD output was compared to that of a model of a single mine branch using the STELLA program. To determine program instabilities, five mine networks were solved using VENTPROG and four of these were run on VENTRAD; the sensitivity of the programs to changes in resistance to air flow in mine branches was also tested. Finally, several studies which included physical data on mines and calculations using various versions of VENTRAD were examined to compare VENTRAD output to physical measurements. The appendix includes source code for VENTPROG version 4 and VENTRAD version 5.

Summarises the results of a research program involving the development of a laboratory experimental facility for the simulation and study of hydro-thermo-mechanical processes in saturated geomaterials with low permeability. The experimentation involves a synthetic cement-based porous material which possesses permeabilities in the range of dense unfractured sandstones or shale. Specially manufactured pore-pressure transducers were installed within the cylindrical block at locations adjacent to a plane free boundary. In its saturated state, the plane boundary of the block was subjected to heating at constant temperature. The resulting pore pressure generation along with temperature at those locations was monitored continuously. The report documents results of a series of experiments and also discusses further extensions to the overall scope of the experimental research program.

The report focuses on a selection of the most valuable gemstones in the global gem trade (excluding diamonds): ruby, sapphire, emerald, chrysoberyl, tsavorite garnet, tanzanite, and the gem minerals found in pegmatites or rhyolites (topaz, aquamarine, tourmaline). For each gem mineral, background information is introduced and the physical and chemical characteristics of the mineral are described. The geology and genesis of each gem deposit type is summarized and exploration guidelines listed. The final chapter discusses application of the exploration criteria to Yukon geology.

In independent apartments. The seven sites were classified as being in middle class, lower middle class, and lower class areas. Both qualitative and quantitative data were collected relating to such matters as tenure in neighbourhood, appeal of residential building and surrounding area, neighbourhood mix, degree of integration into the neighbourhood, public safety, types of neighbours, community services and supports, and ideas of an ideal neighbourhood. The results indicate the importance of neighbourhood factors when considering the housing of people with psychiatric histories.

The program has since evolved to focus on two broad areas of family support: personal development and growth and/or family relief and support. Program intervention usually involves a paid person coming into the home and providing support. This report presents an evaluation of the Program, assessing the Program as an individualised funding family support initiative by showing how the Program is operated and how it is experienced and perceived by each of the stakeholders. The evaluation examines five areas: Program outcomes, service utilisation, consumer benefits, roles and functions, and future directions. Some specific issues examined include special service workers, finding out about and applying to the Program, service delivery models, and cost effectiveness. Recent serious developments affecting the British Columbia salmon fishery include the federal Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans decision to halve the size of the salmon fleet, a very low 1995-96 salmon catch, and depressed prices for salmon. This report assesses the impact of such changes on the province's salmon fishery, with three objectives: to assess impacts of fleet rationalisation and the 1996 commercial and recreational salmon fisheries on coastal communities and the province; to explore the need for transition and adjustment support from government to address the observed economic impacts; and to recommend how best to target transition and adjustment funding and programs. The report's analyses use 1991-94 data as a base for comparison. The report includes a profile of the salmon fishery and analyses of industry-wide, regional, coastal community, and Aboriginal impacts. The final sections evaluate the impacts of the Mifflin Plan (or the Pacific Salmon Revitalization Strategy) and make recommendations for transition programs. This report provides some background to the Project and to the establishment of 13 pilot projects which have been developed and implemented. It explains the purpose, objectives, and methodology of the evaluation of the Project, and then presents preliminary data for each pilot project along with information on the sponsoring agency and the programs offered through the project. A concluding section suggests some of the policy issues that will likely need to be addressed in establishing more flexible child care services in the four designated service areas.

The Ice-Ocean Forecast System (IOFS) is a real-time system developed to forecast wind-driven ice motion off the Labrador and Newfoundland coast. The core of the system is computer model consisting of a baroclinic ocean component and an ice component coupled to the ocean through a surface Ekman layer. A graphical user interface serves as the front end for the forecast model. Sea ice motion and ocean currents are forced by six-hourly forecast surface wind and barometric pressure received from the Canadian Meteorological Centre. The initial ice condition for the model is based on ice charts from the Canadian Ice Service. MICROLOG 97-00599 (1 fiche)

These guidelines have been prepared to help address the needs of marten (Martes americana) in the preparation and implementation of forest management plans that contribute to ensuring long-term health of Ontario forests. The guidelines are designed to maintain habitat of sufficient quality and quantity to support healthy populations of marten. They include an overview of marten ecology and habitat requirements, discussion of the implications of forest management on marten habitat, additional detail about recommendations to manage habitat (along with an example), and discussion of the anticipated evolution of the guidelines.

These guidelines were developed to help Ontario forest managers address the habitat needs of pileated woodpeckers (Dryocopus pileatus) during the planning and implementation of forest management activities. The guidelines address woodpecker habitat needs at two scales. At the stand-level scale, they identify practices that can supply specific habitat features such as cavity trees needed for feeding, nesting, and roosting. At the landscape or management unit level, they help establish broad habitat objectives and the means for their achievement. The guidelines include an overview of the habitat needs of pileated woodpeckers, a discussion of the implications of forest management activities, and recommended forest management practices for the provision of habitat.

Fort McMurray-Athabasca Oil Sands, subregional integrated resource plan

Edmonton : Alberta Environmental Protection, 1996. vi, 58 p. : Maps, Bibl. ISBN 0-86499-749-3
MICROLOG 97-01041 (1 fiche)

This plan document presents the Alberta government resource management policy for public lands and resources within the Fort McMurray-Athabasca Oil Sands planning area. It is intended as a guide for resource managers, industry, and the public with responsibility or interests in the area. A key purpose of the plan is to resolve issues and conflicts on public land and resources through the integration of objectives and by providing the guidelines for achieving those objectives. The document begins with an overview of the planning area and the policy context of the plan. It then sets out the broad resource management direction for the plan with regard to such matters as mineral resources, forests, settlement, agriculture, water resources, tourism, fisheries, wildlife, and infrastructure. Specific objectives and guidelines are then presented for resource management areas within the planning area. The document ends with recommended tasks and strategies for implementing the plan. ### Fort St. John Timber Supply Area : rationale for allowable annual cut (AAC) determination, effective December 31, 1996

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1996. 56 p. : Bibl.

The Fort St. John Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers about 4.7 million hectares in the Prince George Forest Region of British Columbia. About 2.3 million hectares of the TSA are considered productive forest. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the area and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the existing forest inventory, the expected rate of forest growth, the land base contributing to timber harvesting, regeneration delay, silvicultural treatments, areas not satisfactorily restocked, decay and wastage, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow, economic and social objectives, and forest industry facilities. The appendix contains relevant sections of provincial forestry legislation.

Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier of grain of consistently safe, clean and uniform quality has given Canadian grain a competitive advantage in the world market. The challenge ahead is to ensure that this marketing advantage and its economic benefit to farmers can be maintained in a rapidly evolving industry. In response to this challenge, this paper examines issues and options confronting the Canadian grain industry as it moves toward the 21st century. It assesses the western Canadian system for assuring wheat quality, describes alternative wheat quality systems which will address domestic and global changes, and evaluates the impact these alternatives may have on Canada's ability to maintain its market advantage. Options evaluated include parameters, and discontinuing some requirements under the kernel visual distinguishability (KVD) method of quality differentiation.

This report describes natural analogues at Alligator Rivers, Australia; Poços de Caldas, Brazil; Cigar Lake, Saskatchewan; and Palmottu, Finland. Factors observed to prevent or limit uranium mobilisation and transport by groundwater in those analogues are noted. The report also describes negative analogue sites, where host rocks are devoid of known uranium deposits but where high concentrations of dissolved uranium can occur in the groundwater. Finally, the role of redox conditions in the mobilisation of uranium in deep crystalline rock groundwaters is discussed.

A key initiative in administrative renewal of the federal government is the effort to re-engineer current processes for administering pay and benefits. This guide is designed to help directors of personnel and departmental pay and benefits managers implement the re-engineered process model developed by a team within the Treasury Board Secretariat. The model is designed to improve services to employees and managers, enhance the working environment of pay and benefits specialists, and reduce costs significantly. After an introductory section, chapter two presents the government's vision statement and guiding principles regarding pay and benefits services, defines client needs, and sets the goal of quality service. The next two chapters describe the state of pay and benefits today (the current process model) and the re-engineered process model (what pay and benefits will look like after change). The final two chapters contain information on implementing the future process model and managing change.

Existing buildings undergoing renovation, expansion, or change of occupancy presents a problem for building code users to determine the extent to which the existing building must be brought into line with current regulations. This report first discusses principles by which code requirements should be applied to existing buildings. It then outlines the aims and objectives of each article in part 9 of the National Building Code, which contains close to 1000 articles that cover virtually all aspects of building construction. This outline is intended to provide the code user with insight into the purpose of each requirement so that assessments can be made of alternative design solutions. The third section of the report compiles 50 examples of typical problems that may arise in applying the Code to existing buildings. Solutions to these problems are suggested, along with an explanation on how the alternative design solutions were reached. A new section proposed for inclusion in part 9 is appended.

Provides information and guidance to medical practitioners on the medical management of individuals who have been overexposed to tritiated water. Background is included on the characteristics, metabolism, and dose estimation of tritium, and on the potential health risks from tritium exposures. Various treatment principles are presented with special emphasis on techniques for removal of tritiated water from the body so as to reduce the total radiation dose. Radiation protection precautions are also discussed, along with case management procedures. Appendix includes a table of case studies of six individuals treated for tritiated water overexposure.

Health service outcome reporting : a guide for health agencies

Victoria : Ministry of Health & Ministry Responsible for Seniors, 1996. II, 54 p. MICROLOG 97-00919 (1 fiche)

The need for this guide arose initially from the requirement for British Columbia Regional Health Boards to report on health service outcomes to the Ministry of Health. The guide suggests an approach to help a provincial health agency to produce a health outcomes report on its health service outcome activities for the current year. It presents a four-stage process for producing some documents: setting of directions, establishing targets, reviewing evidence, and tracking of outcomes. In the course of this process, 13 questions relating to such matters as objectives, indicators, effectiveness, client assessments, and costs are to be answered. The appendix includes a hypothetical example of a health outcomes report, an example of a process for establishing measurable indicators, an exploration of what an appropriate level of outcome reporting should be for a hospital, and examples of quality-of-life measurement tools.

This study evaluates the flooding potential of the Athabasca River and three small tributaries (Hardisty, Happy, and Maskuta creeks) within the town of Hinton, Alberta. For each river or tributary, the study describes the physiographic setting, flood hydrology, river regime, and other relevant factors such as river ice and bed material transport. It then presents a hydraulic analysis using the HEC-2 computer program (Version 4.60) to compute water surface profiles for 2-, 5-, 10-, 20-, 50-, and 100-year flood peaks. If possible, floodway boundaries are determined. Two built-up areas are identified as being potentially at risk in the event of a 100-year flood. Recommendations are also made for culvert crossing improvements.

This project involved interviews with four Toronto women in their forties who had completed theses which contained a reference to the topic or theories of holistic education, learning, or living. The interviews were conducted to determine what holistic learning/living meant to them and what metaphors they used to describe their experience. By asking the women if there was a time in their life when they remember beginning to explore what they could to live or work more holistically, the author learns whether holism was a part of their thesis because it was part of their lives, or if it was a new insight originating in the thesis.

Horizontal Well Committee (Canada). Calgary, AB : The Committee, 1993. IV, 18 p. : Ill. MICROLOG 97-01172 (1 fiche)

This study focuses on horizontal infill drilling in existing conventional oil pools and on the incremental impact of horizontal versus vertical wells on the future supply of conventional crude oil. It begins with an overview of the concept of horizontal wells and the geological and reservoir engineering aspects of horizontal drilling. The economics of existing horizontal oil wells in Saskatchewan and Alberta is examined using a profitability analysis, with comparisons made to typical vertical wells, and the impact of royalty incentives and production rates on horizontal well profitability is evaluated. Finally, the study evaluates the impact of horizontal drilling on future oil reserves and supply, using two alternative annual drilling scenarios based on such considerations as the historical drilling trend, operators' drilling plans, and financial constraints.

The first section considers near-field groundwater flow, with modelling performed using the SWIFT/386 code. Advection under various configurations of a generic HLW repository is then simulated with a two-dimensional near-field groundwater flow model. Factors analysed include passing-through flux, travelling velocity, and pathway variation with different parameter combinations. The second section simulates diffusion with a one-dimensional analytical model, with scoping calculations performed for iodine-129 diffusion in the backfilled emplacement room. CA EV ND PS SC

Newfoundland. Health System Information Task Force. St. John's : The Task Force, 1995. vii, 70 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 97-01079 (1 fiche)

Presents a report of a task force that examined the existing health information system in Newfoundland, developed a vision of what the system should be, and made recommendations on how to realize the vision. The report notes that a comprehensive health system information framework is required that will cover the continuum of health including health promotion, disease prevention, acute care, and curative, rehabilitative, and support services. Six parts of the framework are described: its desired outcomes, sources of health information, components of health information, quality assurance, users of health information, and uses of health information. Based on the framework and the proposed vision for the system, eight strategic directions are identified, including provision of a unique identifier for each person to track health system interventions, creation of linkages between the health system and other sectors, and implementation of national information system standards. ### Initiation of sand production in the cold production process

R. Sawatzky...et al. Edmonton : Oil Sands Information Services, 1996. 7 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-00838 (1 fiche)

The cold production process involves the simultaneous production of heavy oil containing large numbers of small bubbles of exsolved gas and sand from vertical wells through the use of progressive cavity pumps. A critical component of the process is the initiation of sand production, which occurs at the casing perforations and also in the near wellbore region and in the far-field. Development of predictive models for initiation of sand production requires identification of the dominant initiation mechanisms. This paper assesses the capability of sand matrix failure models to act as predictive tools for initiation of sand production. It compares the critical pressure gradients for sand production predicted by these models with the pressure gradients observed under field conditions and in laboratory experiments. AL EN PR PS SC

Introduction of microbial nutrients in a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault as a result of excavation and operation activities

By S. Stroes-Gascoyne... et al. Pinawa, MB : Whiteshell Laboratories, Geochemistry Research Branch, 1996. 34 p. : ill., Bibl. (AECL research / Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. ; AECL-11532 ISSN 0067-0367) ISBN 0-660-16587-2 CCG-P no. CC2-11532E

Bacterial activity could be expected in those areas of a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault that are conducive to bacterial life, i.e. where effects of heat, moisture content, radiation, and compaction would not prevent or seriously restrict bacterial life and where suitable and sufficient nutrients are present. This report assesses those bacterial nutrients that would be added inadvertently to a vault in the form of residues of materials used to excavate and operate a vault. The assessment is based on measurements of blasting material residues in the various water supplies, in excavated broken rock, and in cores drilled in old and new tunnel walls at the Underground Research Laboratory. Estimates are given for nutrients such as nitrates and organic carbon. The results indicate the source of the largest potential nutrient addition.

The British Columbia government has made a commitment to direct resources to keep children and youth in school. Two programs (the School Meal Program and the Inner City School Program) support this commitment for students who are at risk, such as the nearly 20% of the school population who are from poor families. This handbook clarifies the goals, objectives, and operating standards of these two programs, outlines policy and program requirements, provides guidelines for establishing and maintaining the programs, and describes program planning and planning options to help schools and districts provide efficient and effective social equity programs. The appendix contains standards for food selection and food safety, along with sample forms and letters.

The Atomic Energy Control Board examined its criteria for licensing nuclear power plants following the Chernobyl accident in 1986. Causes of the accident were studied to ascertain whether they revealed any deficiencies in the safety of Candu pressurised heavy water reactors (PHWRs). A 1987 report contained nine recommendations. This paper reviews those recommendations to indicate how they were dealt with by plant owners and the regulatory authority. Issues addressed in the recommendations include shutdown systems, reactivity device configurations, station operating procedures, plant monitoring, and fire fighting. The paper concludes with a description of modifications to the shutdown system at the Pickering A nuclear plant.

This report is a critique of the past 25 years' scholarship in the field of educational politics. It questions the importance and interestingness of many works about the political/policy context of education and argues against those who might dismiss the interesting as unimportant. It first reviews iconoclastic, recent and significant work by Max Weber, discussing the relevance of his works to those concerned with school politics today. Similarities are then found between Weber's ideas and nine types of propositions advanced by Davis (1970) and the report finally suggests what benefits would accrue if established ways of thinking were challenged.

The purpose of this paper is to develop a common understanding of the challenges that face the Ontario Ministry of Community & Social Services and service providers in the 1990s, and to strengthen the way social services are managed. It begins with an outline of the changing roles of social services in Ontario and the new imperatives governing the social service system (government/people partnership, trust and trusteeship, designated responsibility, participation, collegiality, accountability). Opportunities are then identified that will strengthen and improve Ontario's ability to manage a complex network of social programs and reinforce the province's tradition of a public/private alliance responding to those needing help. These opportunities are discussed in the areas of planning, accountability, organisation of development and delivery of social services, and future steps such as implementation and resource management.

Regina : Saskatchewan Environment & Resource Management ; Saskatchewan Agriculture & Food, 1996. vii, 99 p. : Maps, Bibl.

The Manitou Sand Hills in west-central Saskatchewan cover an environmentally sensitive and biologically diverse area with a number of rare and endangered species. The area supports a broad range of land and water uses including grazing, oil development, and recreation. Competing use of land and increased pressure to protect the local environment provided the incentive to develop this integrated resource management plan for the area. The plan focuses on three land use policy areas, which include the Prime Conservation Area, Special Management Area, and Multiple Use Area. It begins with a description of the resources of the Manitou Sand Hills and of the existing land use in the area. It then analyses land use issues, opportunities, and constraints, presents the plan goal and management objectives, and presents the land use and management policies for the three policy areas. The plan concludes with identification of the stakeholder groups, options, and tools involved in implementing the plan. Appendices include plan guidelines.

Flow-accelerated corrosion (FAC) of large areas of carbon steel in various circuits of Candu plants generates significant quantities of corrosion products. The relatively rapid corrosion rate can also lead to operating difficulties with some components. The model results show FAC effects other than those on routine maintenance and surveillance, including sludge generation, steam generator fouling, and leakage in divider plates.

By K.R. Fyfe and C.C. Harrison. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. 93 p. : ill. MICROLOG 97-01202 (2 fiche)

This report studies different methods of calculating one of several parameters that contribute to the overall sound level surrounding a roadway: noise barrier insertion loss. It examines the progression of a selection of the simple methods to the development of the more rigid design solutions as a step to prepare for comparing the predictive capabilities of these methods. Two main classifications of these techniques are reviewed: a group of ray tracing models and a group of wave-based models. The models are compared using configurations with variations in the barrier's size, shape, type of absorptive coatings, and general orientation. A rating parameter is introduced as the potential basis for the formulation of a set of correction factors to be applied, based on the geometrical properties of the barrier configuration.

Mass transport through porous media and adsorption, precipitation, dissolution, and redox reactions are important in many geochemical processes, many of which are relevant to corroding systems. The aim of this report is to review the mechanistic and empirical models developed by geochemists and soil scientists to describe these processes, and to show how they can be used in models to predict the corrosion behaviour of various materials. The corrosion of copper containers used in nuclear fuel waste disposal is used as an example. The report reviews factors affecting corrosion reactions in porous and semi-permeable layers and presents a model for the corrosion of copper containers. The model consists of six mass balance equations describing mass transport, adsorption/desorption, precipitation/dissolution, and redox reactions of six species involved in the corrosion mechanism. Effects of porous structure, adsorption, precipitation, and redox reactions are analysed and the model is applied to other corrosion systems such as those involving corrosion product films and biofilms.

This report documents earthquake-induced liquefaction features found in the Ferland-Boileau valley, Quebec, in the area of the Saguenay earthquake of November 1988. The features that formed as a result of that earthquake include sand boils deposited on the ground surface and sand dikes and sills emplaced in the upper two metres of the soil-sediment profile. Pre-1988 liquefaction features include sand dikes, sills, sand-filled craters or vents, and sand boil deposits. Radiocarbon dates for some of the features enable estimation of the frequency of occurrence of moderate to large earthquakes in this region. The results of this study will help in the selection of sites for paleoseismic studies, identification of paleoliquefaction features, and interpretation of findings in terms of the size and location of paleoearthquakes.

Les cavités murales ont été inspectées au moyen de fibrescopes pour en déterminer la composition et noter les conditions. Des échantillons de colonies visibles de moisissures ont été prélevés pour identifier les espèces. La présence de moisissures coïncidait avec des sources chroniques de mouillage du mur plutôt qu'avec l'emploi de techniques d'aménagement particulières dans les sous-sols. Les moisissures de 16 (59 %) des maisons ont été analysées, et nous avons trouvé des moisissures toxigènes dans toutes les maisons sauf une.

A More progressive system for determining disability in Ontario's social assistance programs : report

Of the Disability Determination Project Team ; for the Advisory Group on New Social Assistance Legislation. Toronto : The Team, 1992. 189 p. MICROLOG 97-00861 (3 fiche)

Ontario's Social Assistance Review Committee made various recommendations in its 1988 report regarding reform of the system of providing social assistance to persons with disabilities. This report advances these recommendations with options for implementation. The first few chapters describe GAINS-D benefit under the Ontario Family Benefits Allowance, compares that benefit to those in other provinces, examines definitions and determination processes in federal and provincial programs outside of social assistance for persons with disabilities, and reviews programs assisting persons with disabilities in other countries. Chapter six includes findings from a book based on a review of the disability components of United States benefit programs. This leads to a re-examination of the disability determination issues under GAINS-D and presentation of broad principles for reform options as well as proposals for a new definition of disability and a new process to determine whether a person qualifies for a benefit due to a disability. The report then describes options and preferred approaches for delivery of benefits and access to employment services that would be triggered by the new disability determination process. Finally, it proposes a comprehensive disability reform and sets out possible options for new social assistance legislation.

Morice Timber Supply Area : rationale for allowable annual cut (AAC) determination, effective November 1, 1996

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1996. 57 p. : Bibl.

The Morice Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers 182,298 about 1.5 million hectares along the western edge of the interior plateau of British Columbia. About 40% of the TSA area is considered to be the long-term timber harvesting land base. After a brief description of the TSA area, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the area and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the existing forest inventory, the expected rate of forest growth, the land base contributing to timber harvesting, regeneration delay, areas not satisfactorily restocked, decay and wastage, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow, and forest industry facilities. The appendix contains relevant sections of provincial forestry legislation.

The National Air Pollution Surveillance Program is a joint project of the federal and provincial levels of government to monitor and assess, on a continuing basis, the quality of the ambient air in the urban regions of Canada. This annual summary presents data reported from over 500 sampling instruments in more than 50 cities across the 10 provinces and the 2 territories. Measurements were made for sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, ozone, soiling index, suspended particulates, lead, sulphate, and nitrate. The summary also compares the data for the year with national air quality objectives for sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, ozone and suspended particulates.

The National Pollutant Release Inventory (NPRI) was established to develop a national, publicly-accessible database of pollutants released to the Canadian environment from industrial and transportation sources. It provides a picture of releases to air, land, water and underground injection, and transfers in waste of a wide range of pollutants. Information provided by individual facilities has been supplemented by Environment Canada for some sectors that could not report on a facility-by-facility basis. The dept. has estimated releases from fuel distribution and mobile sources, which include all forms of transportation and mobile equipment. It also includes data on releases of greenhouse gases and common air contaminants. The report gives a background and overview of the NPRI, characteristics of the data, and national and provincial/territorial overviews. Next it provides estimated emissions from mobile sources and fuel distribution, then other air emission inventories. Data is provided in graphics and statistical tables.

Natural land reclamation for mineral exploration properties and placer mines in Yukon

Provides information on soil, overburden, vegetation, slope stability, and permafrost conditions on disturbed and undisturbed surfaces related to mineral exploration and placer mining in three districts in the Yukon (Klondike, Carmacks, Annie Lake). Disturbances included in this study consist of trenches (dating from 1912), drill pads (dating from 1967), ripped and compacted surfaces associated with roads and camps, and placer mine highwalls and tailings piles (dating from 1911). Observations reported include detailed vegetation descriptions, soil texture and basic chemistry, slope, height, width and age of trenches, elevation, aspect and latitude of the site, and description of any active processes such as erosion, permafrost degradation, failure, and gullying. Preferred sites and rates of natural revegetation by pioneer species are related to disturbance characteristics such as trench orientation, surface compaction, and presence of permafrost. Recommendations on site abandonment and treatment are formulated based on the above information.

The Nature of teaching and learning by high school students in the workplace

By Marjorie Sheasby. Toronto : University of Toronto, Dept. of Education, 1991. vi, 253 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON08370

MICROLOG 97-01136 (3 fiche)

Detailed case studies report the experiences shared by seven students, their teachers, and their workplace supervisors in a high school co-operative education program. Students were enrolled in senior science, law, child development, or drama courses. Two of the students had learning disabilities that they did not disclose to their supervisors. The studies reveal the effects of the match between teaching and learning style in the workplace, including the acquisition of practical knowledge and skills. The studies suggest factors involved in achieving a desired outcome of critical or higher-order thinking skills through co-operative education, and point to the need to reconsider the role of the classroom teacher in the workplace.

Given the diverse historical experience of developing countries with regard to economic growth, this paper attempts to examine the theoretical components of growth theory, with particular attention to new or endogenous growth theory. The key theoretical underpinnings of such theory point to the importance of investment in human capital and the benefits of access to, and the transfer of, technology. The paper also considers the macroeconomic contribution of aid to economic growth, primarily where aid is used to transfer additional resources to a recipient country. Reasons for providing aid and empirical evidence on the impact of aid are discussed, along with the implications for Canadian official development assistance to developing countries. The paper ends with some policy recommendations regarding international assistance.

Victoria : Ministry of Small Business, Tourism & Culture, Sport Services Branch, 1996. 53 p.

In British Columbia, sport organisation accountability is measured primarily through a performance-based organisational audit process called Sport Discovery. This report outlines the findings of Sport Discovery II, the second review, which was completed in late 1995. It contains overviews of provincial sport organisation development, including their structure, policies and procedures, planning processes, human resources, and financial management; athlete development, including recruitment, competition, and training; coaching development; and sport officials development. The Sport Discovery process also identifies attributes within those organisations which could be defined as models or best practices for other organisations. The report ends with an index of best practices as revealed in the process.

A Passive facultative wastewater treatment system for single-family residential use

Ivo Van Bastelaere ; for Denis Barker & Associates Limited. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1996. 36 p. : ill. At head of title: Housing Technology Incentives Program. MICROLOG 97-01203 (1 fiche)

Describes the performance testing of a passive facultative treatment process for on-site treatment of wastewater from a single-family residence. The intent of the system design was to treat domestic wastewater to comparable quality as would be obtained with conventional mechanical secondary biological treatment plants, but in a passive manner. The process used is based on the principle of solids separation and extended retention time for anaerobic digestion of biological materials. The system uses two tanks and a solids separating screen. Results presented include comparison of the system effluent quality (total suspended solids, biological oxygen demand) to that produced by conventional secondary treatment plants sized for single-family dwellings. Reviews Canadian and world-wide performance indicator definitions and data to identify a set of indicators that could be used to compare performance among nuclear power plants. The results of the review are to be used as input for developing a consistent set of performance indicators for measuring Canadian power reactor safety performance. To support the identification of performance indicators, a set of criteria was developed to assess the effectiveness of each indicator for meaningful comparison of performance information. The report identifies a recommended set of performance indicators, along with the basis for selection of the recommended set and the exclusion of others. It also provides definitions and calculation methods for each recommended performance indicator. In addition, a spreadsheet has been developed for comparison and trending for the recommended set of indicators. Example trend graphs are included to demonstrate use of the spreadsheet. CA EN ND SC

Prepared for: Bubble Action Pumps Limited ; prepared by: P.D. Makuch and S.J. Harrison. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. 32 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-01204 (1 fiche)

The bubble pump is an inherently reliable concept with no moving parts, needing no external electrical or mechanical input to operate. It is self-regulating in that it circulates antifreeze, transporting heat from an elevated thermal source to a lower elevation. This report describes the application of this technology to transport of heat from roof-mounted solar collectors to a solar domestic hot water heating system. Such a system was installed on a municipally owned row house and instrumented with a remote data acquisition system to evaluate its performance. Results are presented from the monitoring and evaluation of this system. Results include solar fraction, solar energy delivered, system efficiency, and average daily hot water draw. ### Perspectives of the scale of the Canadian nuclear fuel waste disposal concept

By P. Flavelle. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1996. viii, 24 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0635) MICROLOG 97-00729 (1 fiche)

Examines the scale of the Canadian concept for the disposal of nuclear fuel wastes from various perspectives, concentrating on the scale of site characterisation and the engineering scale of emplacement and excavation mass balance. The physical size of a repository is compared to the scale of current field investigations, including those at the Underground Research Laboratory in Manitoba, in order to develop an understanding of the level of effort that will be required to characterise a potential site for a repository. The mass of material to be handled during excavating, operating, and sealing the repository is estimated to illustrate whether the disposal concept involves extreme amounts of material from a mining perspective. Masses of elements overlying the repository are compared to the mass placed in the repository to develop an understanding of the degree of mass dilution provided by the geosphere. CA EV ND PS SC

Describes work undertaken to develop models and codes to accurately calculate energy deposition by photons and electrons in Candu reactor fuel channels. The investigators tested models using the SANDYL code against those using an independent photon-electron transport code, EGS4. The tests included comparison of code performance on some problems using simple geometries, as well as the complex Candu fuel geometry. Various parameters important to accurate calculations were identified. Sensitivity analysis was used to examine the merit of increasing the number of regions used in the energy deposition calculations in the outer fuel. An empirical model was developed which helped explain the effect of different models of material boundaries on energy deposition, in particular near the pressure tube/coolant and fuel/coolant surfaces. Mining of placer gold generates wastewaters containing high concentrations of fine sediment. Previous studies have concluded that the most practicable method of placer mine wastewater treatment is some form of settling pond system. This report first reviews the major factors that influence placer mining effluent quality and describes mine site constraints for different types of operations. It then reviews the applications and limitations of sedimentation theory and alternative pond design methods as shown in previous studies. A recommended design approach is presented. The next section describes detailed design criteria for settling pond systems, including those relating to data determination, pond size, and pond layout. The final sections review applications and limitations of alternative wastewater treatment methods, and outlines requirements for further research on settling pond systems.

Ce manuel sert de ressource pratique aux personnes menant une recherche sur la pauvreté urbaine. On y présente une série de données normalisées afin de permettre à ceux qui font des recherches, qui élaborent des politiques publiques et aux fournisseurs de services de mieux comprendre la nature de la pauvreté au coeur de leur propre ville et la manière dont elle diffère de la pauvreté dans d'autres centres urbains. Le manuel met d'abord en lumière certains résultats principaux de l'analyse comparative du Conseil canadien de développement social. La première partie présente des comparaisons entre villes parmi certains groupes démographiques. La deuxième partie présente des profils d'une page pour le Canada et chaque province, permettant d'évaluer le profil de la ville dans un contexte national ou provincial. Enfin, la dernière série de tableaux présente les taux de pauvreté pour les familles, les personnes seules et les enfants dans chacune des municipalités à l'intérieur des grandes agglomérations métropolitaines.

This report is the result of a study undertaken to develop a reliability-based methodology for establishing pressure proof testing strategies for concrete containment structures. The objectives of the study also included the assessment of Atomic Energy Control Board requirements for proof testing of Candu concrete containment structures and the development of strategies for proof testing of Candu containment structures. After an introduction on proof testing, the report presents a probabilistic approach to analyse the effect of proof testing on structural reliability. Section three contains background information required to estimate the reliability of containment structures under internal overpressure caused by a loss of coolant accident. Section four discusses the effect of proof testing on the estimated reliability of existing Candu containments at the Bruce, Darlington, Gentilly, Point Lepreau, and Pickering nuclear plants. Section five discusses proof testing strategies for new containment structures.

Proposals for harmonization of cost of credit disclosure laws in Canada

Alberta. Consumer Measures Committee. Edmonton : The Committee, 1996. 25 p.
MICROLOG 97-01005 (1 fiche)

Reforms proposed in this paper are intended to harmonize laws and develop uniform cost of credit disclosure requirements in order to reduce compliance costs and provide uniform consumer protection across Canada; to clarify and simplify (where possible) cost of credit disclosure rules; and to modernize laws to take account of recent developments in credit markets. The proposed harmonization will apply to all federal and provincial laws governing disclosure of the cost of consumer loans. Recognizing that consumer leasing arrangements close in nature to credit arrangements have become increasingly common, jurisdictions have agreed to include disclosure of long-term leasing costs in the harmonized legislation. Provisions in the proposals cover such matters as the use of annual percentage rates, plain language, disclosure statements, advertising, prepayment rights, and compliance provisions and remedies.

A territorial park covering 389 square kilometres has been proposed in the Tombstone Mountain area, located about 50 kilometres north-east of Dawson, Yukon. This study reviews the mineral potential of the proposed park and the surrounding area. It compiles all available data, including information from mining company assessment reports, published geological maps and reports, aerial photos, magnetic surveys, and sediment geochemistry studies. Sections of the compilation cover the tectonic setting of the study area, stratigraphy, geological structure, mineral occurrences, stream sediment geochemistry, lithogeochemistry, soil and water geochemistry, and geophysical surveys. The final section evaluates the mineral potential of the area, focusing on Cretaceous intrusions such as the Tombstone Stock. The appendix contains detailed stream sediment geochemical data.

Single-tree selection, group selection, and the uniform shelterwood system involve partial cutting where the choice of trees to be harvested is controlled by tree-marking decisions. This report describes an intensive audit conducted in Algonquin Provincial Park, Ontario, to monitor the quality of tree-marking operations. The investigators established 295 plots of 0.1 acre each, in 87 hardwood stands, marked under a selection silvicultural system management prescription. Results presented include individual plot-error and stand-error variation, tree-choice errors, and distribution of marking errors according to tree quality class and type of error. The need for continuous monitoring to track performance and allow revision of quality standards is discussed. Includes suggestions for efficient sampling design and data collection methods.

During routine operation of a Candu 6 reactor, various gaseous, liquid, and solid radioactive wastes are generated. This report discusses the small amounts of gaseous and liquid wastes that are continually discharged at very low concentrations. It describes the sources of gaseous radioactivity (tritium, carbon-14, noble gases, iodine-131, particulate) and liquid radioactivity (tritium and other), presents data on gaseous and liquid releases from four Candu 6 reactors, and discusses the various paths taken by these radioactive materials in their escape from process systems such as the heat transport system, moderator system, and fuel handling systems. Finally, consequences of effluent escape are assessed, including occupational and public exposures and the derived dose factors for significant radionuclides released.

Recommendations from the Task Force on Strict Discipline for Young Offenders

To the Ontario Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services. Toronto : The Task Force, 1996. 33 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-00866 (1 fiche)

Strict discipline programs, as considered in this report, are those which use a structured and consistent learning environment to teach high-risk, repeat young offenders the advantages of socially acceptable behaviour. The report presents findings and recommendations of a task force that held consultations, conducted institutional visits, and reviewed literature regarding strict discipline programs for young offenders and their possible implementation in Ontario. It discusses the need for a pilot project to evaluate the effectiveness of such a program, which would include life skills training and would target high-risk offenders. The report then outlines general considerations for implementing strict discipline programs and makes recommendations to expand such programming as a part of the government's initiatives to combat youth crime. The appendix includes data on young offenders and a summary of site visits to youth correctional facilities in Ontario, Manitoba, and New York State.

Reference used fuel for the Canadian nuclear fuel waste disposal concept

By P. Flavelle. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1996. viii, 15 p. : Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0633) MICROLOG 97-00728 (1 fiche)

Assessment of the environmental impact, including the radiological impact on humans, of the Canadian nuclear fuel waste disposal concept must begin with the identification of the inventory of contaminants that will be contained in the used fuel. The variation in existing and future contaminant inventories, and the conceptual nature of the current program for nuclear fuel waste disposal, makes it appropriate to base the concept assessment on a reference contaminant inventory. This paper recommends a reference fuel (Bruce A type, with a burnup of 865 gigajoules per kilogram of uranium) from which to calculate a conservative radionuclide contaminant inventory. It explains the reasons for this recommendation and estimates the radiological hazard of the reference fuel, including the evolution of the major isotopes contributing to the hazard.

ISBN 0-662-24335-8 CCG-P no. Fo29-42/26-1996E. MICROLOG 97-00870 (1 fiche)

Describes a study that measured advance growth amounts, vegetation cover, and soil surface conditions prior to harvesting in 11 peatland black spruce stands near Kapuskasing, Ontario. The investigators remeasured the stands at one, three, six, and ten growing seasons after harvesting using three different methods. The results presented are intended to examine the long-term survival of black spruce advance growth and ingress of black spruce seedlings following harvesting; to document black spruce height growth rates following harvesting; to examine the initial height structure of regenerated stands; and to examine trends in surface conditions on the peatlands.

Presents an overview of reliability assessment for software, focusing on some basic aspects of assessing reliability for safety-critical systems by statistical random testing. Also discusses possible deviations from some essential assumptions on which the general methodology is based. These deviations appear quite likely in practical applications. Possible remedies and adjustments are presented and discussed and the methodology is then applied to part of the SDS1 software. Shortcomings of the methodology are indicated along with possible avenues to explore to address those problems. The appendix contains an extensive review of the literature related to assessing the reliability of software. CA ND PS SC

Reliability-based inspection of prestressed concrete containment structures

The main goal of this investigation was to assess the CSA N287.7 standard inspection procedures for evaluating prestressing systems at Candu nuclear containment structures. This report discusses the role of the prestressing system in containment design, highlighting the impact of prestressing losses on containment leak integrity. Current CSA N287.7 inspection guidelines are also summarised. It then discusses major elements of the probabilistic analysis framework employed in the assessment, including limit state functions, loads and resistance models, load combinations, target reliability levels, and computational approach. The final sections present methods for using inspection data in reliability-based evaluation of bonded and unbonded prestressing systems. In these sections, several issues pertinent to inspection strategies, such as effect of sample size, are examined in detail. CA ND PS SC

By David Perry. Victoria : The Commission, 1996. ii, 311 p. : ill., Bibl. David Perry, Special Commissioner. MICROLOG 97-00911 (3 fiche)

The Greater Victoria Water District, a statutory body created in 1948, has come under intense scrutiny in recent years over such issues as water pricing and land use. Accordingly, the province appointed a special commission to review and make recommendations on the provision of a sustainable water supply for the Greater Victoria region. This report presents the findings and recommendations of the commission, which conducted an extensive series of meetings and consultations with various levels of government, public agencies, and other stakeholders and the general public. Issues considered in the review come under three main headings: the form of political structure or governance that should administer the Water District; land use issues, in particular those related to lands surplus to the District's direct needs; and water conservation measures. Recommendations include creation of a Regional Water Commission.

Argosy Finance obtained money from the public through selling of interests in syndicated mortgages, registered retirement savings plans, and unsecured debentures. It collapsed from two main causes: fraudulent diversion of funds and self-dealing in mortgage lending to companies owned or controlled by Argosy officers and directors or their relatives, resulting in too much lending to unsound borrowers. The collapse left about 1,600 victims and resulted in an extensive investigation by the Ontario Ombudsman, whose report is summarised in the first part of this document. The main part of the report presents findings of the Ontario Legislature's Standing Committee on the Ombudsman in its examination of the Ombudsman's recommendations for compensation to the Argosy victims. Issues considered include whether the two government bodies involved (Ontario Securities Commission and the Registrar of Mortgage Brokers) demonstrated wrong or unreasonable conduct in their handling of Argosy. Each of the Bruce A Nuclear Generating Station reactor units is controlled by the Reactor Regulating System (RRS) software running on digital computers. This report presents an assessment of the quality and reliability of RRS software based on a review of the RRS design documentation, an analysis of certain Significant Event Reports, and an examination of selected software changes. Issues examined in the assessment include adequacy of RRS software requirement documentation, completeness and accuracy of RRS design documents, implied faults in RRS, follow-up investigations of Significant Event Reports, and adequacy of software change control procedures.

Improvements in the DOE-2 program, originally developed by Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, are seen as important for possible future use as a compliance tool for the Energy Code, in support of the C-2000 program or utility demand side management programs, and in building design and applied buildings research. This report identifies limitations of the DOE-2 program, as identified from a questionnaire survey of program users and from the experiences of Caneta Research. The limitations are listed in the following categories: loads, systems, plant modelling, and general limitations. Version 2.1 E of the program is also evaluated for limitations. Finally, the report outlines priorities for improvement.

Review of Ontario Hydro program to reduce fuel channel gap

By K.J. Hollingbery and J. Robinson. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1995. v, 13 p. : ill. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0614)
MICROLOG 97-00705 (1 fiche)

Creep, as axial and diametral growth, is a phenomenon that occurs in zirconium alloy reactor fuel channels under continuous reactor operation. Fuel channel creep creates a gap between the fuel bundle string and the extended fuel channel end stops. Abnormal conditions giving rise to sudden reversal in flow direction in the channel would move fuel back into the reactor, creating sudden and unacceptable operating conditions. Under excessive creep, the last fuel bundle in the flow inlet end of the channel can move away from its support on the end fitting and can vibrate, resulting in excessive fretting and wear between bundle and channel. This report reviews three potential solutions or approaches to addressing this problem, each designed to prevent fuel bundles shifting into the reactor core under flow reversal and to reduce or eliminate fuel vibration and the consequent fretting observed in channels with significant creep.

Transport of trace amounts of radionuclides and toxic trace elements from underground nuclear fuel waste disposal vaults towards the biosphere can be retarded by chemical and physical interactions between those elements and the geological surfaces along groundwater flow paths. Sorption data that can be applied to site-specific conditions will be required as part of the characterization of any site selected for permanent disposal of nuclear fuel waste. This report discusses the requirements for a sorption database, including the sorption model used, sorption parameters, and data sources. It then comments on selected sorption values for a revision of a previously published sorption database (Vandergraaf and Ticknor, 1994), incorporating data published since 1990. The appendix tabulates coefficients for the sorption equation for the sorption of individual elements onto various minerals.

Describes a revised conceptual hydrogeologic model of regional groundwater flow in the crystalline rocks of the Whiteshell Research Area, Manitoba. Model boundaries were selected to coincide with the natural hydraulic boundaries assumed for the regional groundwater flow systems in the area. Rocks of the modelled region were divided on the basis of fracture characteristics into three categories: fractured zones, moderately fractured rock, and sparsely fractured rock. A fault framework formed by 76 selected fractured zones was constructed by linking the more prominent lineaments identified from satellite and airborne surveys, surface mapping, and borehole data. Physical rock/water properties were used to define a mathematical groundwater flow model, whose hydraulic properties were modified using an iterative process including sensitivity analysis and comparison with field measurements.

The objective of this study is to assess the seismic withstand capacity of selected safety-related mechanical systems associated with the pressure relief duct at the Pickering A Nuclear Generating Station. These systems are attached to the duct and include the emergency coolant injection system piping, the vacuum ducts, the emergency water storage system, and seals. The study develops representative models of the mechanical systems and uses analytical simulations to determine the dynamic characteristics and behaviour of the systems to inelastic nonlinear dynamic response of the pressure relief duct when subjected to severe levels of ground motion. The seismic performance of the various mechanical components attached to the duct were determined on the basis of performance criteria consistent with the safety function of the systems. The system performance is determined up to the point of structural collapse of the duct.

The objective of the research reported is to gain fundamental empirical insights into the sources of change in residential property values in the metropolitan Vancouver area through a detailed analysis and comparison of 1981 and 1991 census and real estate data. A simple yet persuasive new methodology was used to decompose 1981-1991 price changes into seven distinct components: demand due to population growth; changing preferences for housing attributes; changing preferences for neighbourhood characteristics; changes in the accessibility gradient; market valuation of changes to housing attributes; market valuation of changes in neighbourhood profiles; and market valuation of changes in accessibility. The results provide fresh insights into the effectiveness of the Greater Vancouver Regional District in shaping metropolitan growth through its Regional Town Centres initiative.

The first part of this report describes a study of the major and trace element composition of about 2,700 gold particles from 21 gold-bearing mesothermal quartz veins and 35 placer gold samples from the Klondike District, Yukon. Measured contents of gold, silver, copper, and mercury were used to define a characteristic geochemical signature for each of the vein samples, and these signatures were then compared with the various compositional populations distinguished within each of the placer samples. Preliminary conclusions relating to placer gold sources are derived. The second part is a semi-quantitative study of various physical features of the lode and placer gold particles.

Shape parameters of roundness and flatness, and the characteristics of the high fineness rims were determined using a classification method. Relationships were derived between those parameters and distance of transport of a particle.

Le Groupe de consultation sur la santé a été créé pour prodiguer des conseils et faire des recommandations au Ministre de la Santé sur certaines questions d'intérêt actuel touchant la prestation des services de santé aux Manitobains. Lorsqu'un groupe de travail a présenté son rapport final sur toutes les questions qui relèvent de son mandat ou sur un volet important de ce dernier, le Comité directeur étudie le rapport et le transmet au Ministre, avec ses propres recommandations. Ce rapport, ainsi que les autres qui seront présentés au Ministre, se divise donc en deux sections : le rapport final du groupe de travail, qui sert de document de référence, et une déclaration où le Comité directeur présente son point de vue. Les deux sections sont présentées dans ce document et constituent le rapport définitif sur les services de santé notables, en ce qui a trait aux soins de santé primaires.

Source term for the bounding assessment of Canadian nuclear fuel waste disposal concept

By P. Flavell. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1996. viii, 34 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0634)
MICROLOG 97-00699 (1 fiche)

In this report, a reference used fuel (Bruce A) is employed to derive the source term for contaminant releases from the emplacement canisters used in the Canadian nuclear fuel waste disposal concept. This requires development of a container failure function which defines the age of the fuel when the canister is perforated and flooded. The source term is expressed as the time-dependent fractional release rate from the used fuel or as the time-dependent contaminant concentrations in the canister porewater. It is derived as the superposition of an instant release, comprising the upper bound of the gap and grain boundary inventory in the used fuel, and the long-term dissolution of the used fuel matrix. Several dissolution models under different conditions are evaluated, and the one resulting in the highest release rate/highest porewater concentration is adopted as the bounding case. Comparisons between models are made on the basis of the potential ingestion hazard of the canister porewater, to account for differences in the hazard of different radionuclides.

Space radiation environment estimation for RADARSAT II

To design a satellite system that can withstand the rigors of the ionising radiation present in space throughout a desired mission, the space radiation environment and the impact of that environment on the electronic systems of the satellite must be addressed. This report describes a study to determine the best estimate of the radiation environment and the resulting total ionising radiation dose that will be encountered by the Radarsat II satellite. The study method exploits utilisation of space radiation environmental models: the AE-8 trapped radiation model to determine total mission electron flux, CREME to obtain the contribution from galactic cosmic rays and solar flares, and AP-8 to estimate the trapped proton flux. Radiation transport codes such as TRIM and ITS 3.0 were used to determine total dose. Results are presented for electron, pro-ton, and heavy ion contributions to the total dose.

This paper uses regime-switching econometrics to study stock market crashes and to explore the ability of two very different economic explanations to account for historical crashes. The first explanation is based on historical accounts of manias and panics. Its key features are that overvaluation increases the probability of the expected size of a crash. This explanation is examined using data from the United States for 1926 to 1989. The second explanation is based on switches in fundamentals. Section two of the paper develops models of speculative behaviour and switching fundamentals, and section three shows the relationship between speculative behaviour and a switching-regression specification, and tests the null hypothesis that stock market returns are unrelated to the deviation from fundamental price using parametric restrictions on the switching-regression specification. The final sections present parameter estimates of the model of switching fundamentals, discuss to what extent shifts in fundamentals explain the switching-regression results, and analyse how well the probabilities of collapse generated by each model accord with actual stock market crashes.

MICROLOG 97-01071 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

Provides a factual resource for those doing research on urban poverty, using a standardized set of data. Begins by highlighting some key findings from a comparative analysis of poverty between 1973 and 1994. Section one presents some inter-urban comparisons among selected demographic groups: children, two-parent families, the elderly, and working-age individuals. The comparisons demonstrate the diversity in the profile of poverty and illustrate some of the methods of analyzing the data presented in the individual city profiles. Section two presents a series of one-page profiles of Canada, each of the provinces, and 25 major census metropolitan areas. The profiles consist of poverty statistics on unattached individuals (by age and sex), economic families (by type and age), children (by age), and all persons (by age, sex, and minority group). Tables are also included showing poverty rates for families, unattached individuals, and children for each municipality within the large metropolitan areas. Includes glossary.

The Newfoundland government intends to develop a social plan that will consider the accessibility, fairness, and affordability of such services as health care, education, justice, and social services. The plan will assess needs and priorities for the future and will decide how Newfoundlanders should share the responsibility for maintaining their social system in the future. This consultation paper provides background information and raises issues and perspectives for discussion during the public consultation process being conducted as part of plan development. The opening chapters describe this process, examines some key changes that will shape social policy and programs, and looks at some areas of particular concern and challenge today. The main part of the paper examines various human service programs and initiatives in more detail, and discusses some of the trends, problems, and financial realities likely to influence how such services are provided in the future. This part also looks at the role of the volunteer sector. Each chapter ends by presenting some of the kinds of choices that will have to be made to formulate a strategy for the future.

In Prince Edward Island, low literacy skills are a complex problem for the 40% of the adult population who can read only simple material; in addition, 17% cannot read at all. The introduction to this report reviews the state of literacy in the province and the need to upgrade Islanders' literacy levels, a key factor in achieving a stronger and more prosperous province. Current initiatives and resources involved in adult literacy education are reviewed and a strategy is presented for improving adult literacy in the broader context of adult education. This strategy contains a mission statement, list of guiding principles, a set of priority planning issues, an overall goal, eight specific objectives, and an implementation plan. Objectives include formation of a structured adult literacy/education system, establishment of partnerships, and facilitation of a continuum of learning in a community learning environment.

Assessment of the structural behaviour included investigating the interaction between slenderness, axial load, and prestress, as well as determining the influence of repeated loading on the response. The effect of eccentric axial load applied at 30 millimetres from the centre of the cross-section was also studied. For direct comparison, normally reinforced walls were tested.

Whitehorse : Northern Affairs Program, Yukon Region, Exploration & Geological Services Division, 1987. iv, 136 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 97-01100 (2 fiche)

This study evaluates the viability of a custom ore treatment plant as an aid to the small-scale operator, owners of smaller vein deposits, and those who require a less capital intensive vehicle for immediate cash flow from which to finance enhanced exploration and property development. A conceptual design is presented for a range of such plants and the capital and operating costs are combined with other requirements normal for a total mine ore treatment complex in order to derive the commercial viability and expected rate of return on investment. Plant components discussed include those relating to crushing, grinding, gravity concentration, flotation, cyanidation, stockpiling, assaying, power supply, tailings, manpower, and environmental mitigation. Process flow sheets presented relate to typical Yukon ores containing gold, silver, lead and zinc sulphides, and heavy minerals. Costs are estimated for a typical 125 tonne per day project.

Drerup Armstrong Ltd. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1996. 79 p. : ill. MICROLOG 97-01200 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a survey of 15 houses suspected of causing or aggravating health problems of the occupants. The main objective of the survey was to evaluate the method of investigating the indoor air quality of housing using an inspection protocol developed for this purpose. A secondary objective was to determine the types of indoor air quality problems in these houses. These problems included moulds, moisture, and chemical contaminants. Sources of contaminants were identified and improvements in the format of the inspection checklists used as part of the inspection protocol are suggested. The study demonstrated the feasibility of conducting indoor air quality investigations of houses using that inspection protocol, and also identified a need for a formal program to train suitably qualified candidates to become residential indoor air quality investigators.

In late 1990, the Joint Subcommittee on Regulatory Research of the AECB's Advisory Committees on Radiological Protection and on Nuclear Safety decided that a survey of research programs in radiation protection in Canada should be carried out. The purposes of this survey were to determine the current state of funding for this type of research and to understand the changes which have occurred over the past decade. Funding for radiation protection research in Canada is critical to establishing and maintaining a supply of trained professionals who can comprehend, and contribute to international understanding of, the health effects of exposure to ionising radiation, and who can thus provide competent advice on problems in radiation protection. A formal questionnaire was approved by the JSCRR in June 1991 and a list of addressees was compiled. Distribution of the questionnaire was carried out later in 1991. This report is an analysis of the information received, together with observations about the state of this research in Canada.

Floater dredging is a mining method which uses a hydraulic excavator to feed placer gravel to a floating gravel processing plant. This report describes pilot-scale tests conducted to see whether the digging face of a dredge pond dug in permafrost would haul fast enough to supply gravel for a production-scale mining operation. Factors varied in the tests included the slope of the digging face and the type of teeth used on the excavator. The report includes a plan for setting up a floater dredging operation on frozen ground similar to that found in the pilot tests.

A multitype library system is a co-operative one in which any two or more types of libraries participate to deliver library service. This document presents the detailed plan for implementing the development of a multitype library system in Saskatchewan, beginning with the concept of establishing partnerships among the four library sectors in the province (post-secondary, public, school, and special libraries). It lists the strategy and action along with a brief explanation of the thinking behind creation of the action, and also identifies what specific activities should be undertaken, who should do them, and when they should be done.

MICROLOG 97-01196 (2 fiche)

This publication continues the history of development of Canadian housing technology chronicled in the 1994 CMHC publication entitled Two Decades of Innovation in Housing Technology : 1946-65. It covers the three decades from 1966 to 1996, a period that witnessed further evolution of cost-effective building techniques, development of expertise in energy efficiency and building science, experiments in denser housing forms, the emergence of the renovation industry, and introduction of new products in response to increasing demands on performance and environmental impact. The first two parts of this publication provide the context for technology development over 1966-96, including population and economic trends, consumer attitudes and life styles, and the evolution of the housing industry. Parts 3 and 4 capture the key technological innovations, including productivity improvements and technical advances in specific areas such as energy efficiency, durability, and the indoor environment. Part 5 summarizes the trends expected to influence future housing, highlights new and emerging technologies, and notes potential areas for further development.

Toxicity levels to humans during acute exposure to hydrogen fluoride, an update

Hydrogen fluoride (HF) is used in bulk at uranium plants in Canada, posing a chemical risk to workers, the public, and the environment. The main objective of this study is to update a 1984 report which derived dose-response relationships for lethality for human exposure to HF gas. The study methodology included an up-to-date review of the literature, use of standard reference works on toxicology, and search of computerised data bases. The study reviews information under four categories: animal studies, controlled human studies, community exposure, and industrial exposure. Data in these areas were critically evaluated for their relevance to lethal concentrations at the three levels derived in the 1984 report. Routes of exposure and metabolism of HF are also reviewed.

Details the study of training of troubleshooting skills for Canadian nuclear power plant operators and maintainers. The study included a literature review, a survey of experts in training for troubleshooting skills in North America, and a survey of Canadian nuclear power plant training centres. The literature review and survey of training experts identified the state of the art in troubleshooting training with respect to training approaches and training tools. Trainers in the military, pharmaceutical, petrochemical, and nuclear industries noted current approaches and technologies used in training for troubleshooting. Training personnel responsible for Canada's major nuclear plants provided information on the status of troubleshooting training in the Canadian nuclear industry. Conclusions and recommendations regarding the nature of the troubleshooting tasks performed by operators and maintainers and the related training are included.

Placer mining involves washing stream gravels to separate and free the desired minerals. Excess effluent contains some residual suspended fine silt and clay particles. This study examines the applicability of introducing placer effluent through a diffuser to lessen the environmental impact. The study discusses diffuser design and employs CORMIX (Cornell Mixing Zone Expert System) to model two series of scenarios using receiving water data for the Fortymile River, Yukon. In one series, the concentration of suspended solids in the effluent was varied; in the other, the effluent flow rate was varied. Results showed the distance downstream at which a water quality objective of 12.5 milligrams/litre of suspended sediment was achieved. The CORMIX model was also used to predict effluent behaviour in some hypothetical receiving streams, showing the effect of stream size on the diffusion rate. The question of sedimentation was examined by comparing background to introduced sediment levels, calculating the shear/fall velocity ratio for the sediment, and comparing model results to flume testing and other field investigations.

The Ice-Ocean Forecast System (IOFS) is a real-time system developed to forecast wind-driven ice motion off the Labrador and Newfoundland coast. The core of the system is computer model consisting of a baroclinic ocean component and an ice component coupled to the ocean through a surface Ekman layer. A graphical user interface serves as the front end for the forecast model. Sea ice motion and ocean currents are forced by six-hourly forecast surface wind and barometric pressure received from the Canadian Meteorological Centre. The initial ice condition for the model is based on ice charts from the Canadian Ice Service. This report describes the IOFS directory structure, data format, and procedures for starting and running the IOFS model using the graphical interface. Details are included on making forecasts, displaying results, and archiving output. Sample screens are provided.

Ventilation system for new and existing houses with baseboard heating — Rev.

By James T. Reardon. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation ; National Research Council Canada, 1995. xv, 108 p. : ill., Bibl. At head of title: NRC client report.
MICROLOG 97-01194 (2 fiche)

Houses with forced-air heating systems are generally regarded as well-ventilated when the furnace is operating. Houses with alternative heating systems which do not include ducts may not experience enough ventilation air supply or adequate air distribution. This report describes a project that examined five simple ventilation systems suitable for houses without forced-air heating systems. Four of these systems were exhaust-only, using either only local exhaust fans in the kitchen and bathrooms or the local exhaust fans supplemented with a partially distributed exhaust system with pickups in each bedroom. Each of these exhaust-only approaches was tested with deliberate passive inlet vents (both distributed or centralized) both open and closed. The fifth system was a supply and exhaust system with minimally sized ducts supplying ventilation air to each habitable room, and the local exhaust fans providing the exhaust. The five ventilation systems were installed in a two-storey research house which also has an electric forced-air heating system. Ventilation performance of each system was measured under a variety of weather conditions and comparative results are presented.

By Eric Burnett and John Straube. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. x, 146 p. : ill., Bibl.

The objective of this report is to explore the influence of screened exterior wall system vents on ventilation and pressure moderation. The focus is restricted to air movement through the vents in the screen and the influence of this air movement on wall performance. Both idealized vents (orifices) as well as commercially available vent inserts are examined. The report begins with a discussion of air flow through vents, introducing the basic theory and reviewing previous research. Experiments to measure vent performance under static and dynamic pressures are described and the results discussed. The forces driving air through vents are then examined, including discussion of results and implications of field measurements. The final chapters summarize the mechanics of air flow through wall cavities and vents, and the potential for ventilation drying. Appendices contain an example of ventilation drying calculations and samples of the experimental results.

Describes an extensive heap leach field test conducted during winter 1993-94 to demonstrate the viability of heap leaching Williams Creek (Yukon) copper ores in an Arctic setting on a year-round basis. The test itself was modelled after a successful winter leaching operation in Montana which employed an overlying one-metre layer of crushed ore, plus variable snow cover, to insulate the heap and permit year-round operation. The test utilized an approximately five-metre diameter crib loaded with a composite of ore from the higher grade end of the Williams Creek deposit. Side walls of the crib were insulated and the top was overlain by crushed ore. Leaching was performed at a flow rate matching that commonly used in the industry, with leachate temperature at about 21 degrees C. Results presented include temperature profiles in the leach pile and ambient temperature data.

Working Group to Identify the Regional Resources Necessary to Resume the Downsizing of Riverview Hospital : report

Working Group to Identify the Regional Resources Necessary to Resume the Downsizing of Riverview Hospital (B.C.). Victoria : The Working Group, 1996. 12 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-00949 (1 fiche)

This report is based on the recommendations of a working group established after the temporary suspension of the downsizing of Riverview Hospital, a key mental health facility in the lower mainland of British Columbia. It discusses the effects of the downsizing process, the adequacy of mental health facilities in the lower mainland, the adequacy of support services for mental health patients, health system funding, the capacity of acute psychiatric programs in general hospitals, public awareness of mental health issues, and the provincial commitment toward the mental health system. The report proposes a number of management strategies and specific actions, which apply to all areas of the province, for facilitating the resumption of Riverview downsizing.

Yukon coal inventory, 1994

By J.A. Hunt. Whitehorse : Yukon Territorial Government, Economic Development, Energy & Mines Branch, 1994. I, 169 p. : ill., Maps Fold. map not filmed.
MICROLOG 97-01105 (2 fiche)

Compiles in a single report information on Yukon coal deposits from scattered references. It describes the general areas where coal is known to have been found and all recorded individual coal occurrences. The occurrences are arranged in seven sections by geographic subdivision, with each section containing a short introduction describing the coal-bearing sediments in the subdivision. Descriptions of individual occurrences include information on (where available) location and access, exploration and production history, deposit description, coal quality, reserves, potential for development, and bibliographic references.

Yukon Driver Control Board : Report to the Minister 1995

Whitehorse : The Board, 1995. 8 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-00780 (1 fiche)

The Board, which is made up of 3 lay persons and 2 physicians, functions under the authority of the Motor Vehicle Act, operates as a Driver Control Board and a Medical Review Board, and acts as a quasi-judicial board that, as an appeal body, gives an individual an appeal and review process on a sanction imposed by the Registrar under the Act and, after full investigation, may confirm the decision of the Registrar or order the licence to be reinstated. The Board also operates as an independent decision making body and fulfils an adjudicative role. Their decisions, in many cases, impact highly on government and the general public. This report presents information on membership, the Government/Board relationship, travel of members, finances, a chronology, decisions, recommendations, and a look at the future. Board activities are also presented.

Yukon farm survey, 1991

By Michael White and Kathy Bisset. Whitehorse : Yukon Renewable Resources, Agriculture Branch ; Yukon Agricultural Assn, 1993. v, 23 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00654 (1 fiche)

This report is the culmination of a two-year process developing comprehensive statistics on the Yukon agriculture industry. The survey team attempted to collect data from every farm in the territory; information in the report comes from 137 farms that reported. Statistics and discussion are provided under the following sections: industry overview, including land use and farm receipts; a profile of the territory's agricultural lands; production by agricultural sector; and characteristics of farms, such as labour, finances, crop practices, and marketing practices. The report then presents results of a survey in which farmers were asked for their comments on the importance of various development issues facing the industry.

Yukon geoscience, a blueprint for the future : transactions of the first Yukon Geoscience Planning Workshop

Yukon Geoscience Planning Workshop (1995 : Lakeview Marina, Yukon). Whitehorse : Indian & Northern Affairs Canada, Northern Affairs: Yukon Region, 1995. 50 p.
MICROLOG 97-01108 (1 fiche)

The future prosperity of the Yukon mining industry depends on the discovery of new mineral deposits, which in turn depends on up-to-date geoscientific research. This document summarizes the results of a workshop held to identify and prioritize geoscience requirements for the Yukon for the next 5-10 years. It represents a consensus between four sponsoring agencies and will be used in planning geoscientific research to ensure that priorities are met and that maximum value is obtained from available funding. The workshop was divided in three sections covering bedrock geology and mineral deposits; surficial, placer, and environmental geology; and regional geochemical and geophysical surveys.
